Hunton & Williams LLP Launches Business Tort & Product Liability Blog

Hunton & Williams announced today the launch of the Hunton Business Tort Liability Report blog, www.huntonbusinessstort.com. The blog focuses on legal developments in the business tort and product liability world and discusses hot topics on a broad range of related issues. It includes analysis of recent court and regulatory decisions, as well as of federal and state legislation.

“The Business Tort Liability Report blog will provide valuable information regarding national complex business tort and product litigation as well as industry updates,” said David Landin, who is co-chair of the firm’s business tort and product liability practice and based in the firm’s Richmond office. Stuart Raphael, co-chair of the practice group (and based in the firm’s McLean, VA, and Washington, DC, offices), added, “We hope to leverage the experience of our talented trial lawyers to provide an in-depth analysis of issues facing our clients.”

The group’s lawyers have represented clients in large, complex business tort and product litigation all across the country. Our lawyers have served as national coordinating counsel and national trial team members for toxic tort cases involving vinyl chloride, lead paint, fuel additives, asbestos, tobacco and numerous environmental contaminants. Our extensive class-action experience includes consumer fraud, nuisance and occupational exposure claims. Corporate Counsel and The National Law Journal have ranked Hunton & Williams among the “go-to” litigation and trial firms for large corporations.
